How the Good Work of Christianizing Chinamen is Carried on in Chinamen is Carried on in this City.

THE GOOD TEMPLARS.

With a new state which is rapidly developing itself into one of great importance is the Helena lodge No. 2. L. O. G. T., which is the Helena lodge No. 2. L. O. G. T., which is marked the domestic spoken of in the pages. Proprespering more at the present day than was ever before known in its history. The dwith the theology are carnest, active and faithful workers. They are doing all in their general propressering more than the regularity with which they attend. It is a very rare thing when all are not found in the room cach Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. During the following hour the exercises are held under the supervision of Mrs. B. H. Greene, assisted by her daughters. Miss Emeline and Miss L. J. Dabney. The pupils are Lung Choy Yuen, Lung Chen Yuen, Lung Tun, Yon Sun, Ying Hop, Lung Yun, Yuen, Jong Kin, Fong Cam and Wong Gum Lee, Each is more fortunate than many citizens of this country in his ability to speak and the caterial meant committee, and only the content of the interest of the city and state, the promotion of the interests of the city and state, the promotion of the interests of the city and state, the promotion of the interest of the city and state, the promotion of the interests of the city and state, the promotion of the interests of the city and state, the promotion of the interests of the city and state, the promotion of the interests of the city and state, the pro

Jong Kin, Fong Cam and Wong Gum Lee. Each is more fortunate than many citizens of this country in his ability to speak and read English. But this would be of little avail if there was a failure to appreciate the efforts of the teachers, but fortunately this is not the case. Under kindly guidance a chapter of the Bible is read in concert by each class. The lessons of the different passages are explained in an interesting way and the obscure points made clear. When a word outside of the pupil's vocabulary is found he asks for a definition, which is cheerfully given. When this exercise is finished a few byans are sung. Then the pupils recite in their own language the church creed and the Lord's prayer. With a friendly hand shake for each of the teachers and any visitors who may be present, the Chinamen leave for their homes. Their Christian earnestness is perhaps best shown by their missionery work. "Indeed," said Mrs. Greene, "they are the best missionaries we have." Each of the Chinamen makes a special effort to bring a brother of his race to the school. While it is a very difficult matter to do this the school is increasing in membership as well as in spiritual growth. But once in the school they wish to correct a wish to correct a difficult matter to do this the school is increasing in membership as well as in spiritual growth. But once in the school they become firm friends of their instructors.

Mrs. Green says that no better christians can be found in the land than these nine Chinamen. They believe implicitly the lessons that are taught, while their enjoyment of the exercises is very evident, and the work is equally enjoyable to the instructors. If a pupil's earnest attention and intelligent appreciation fail to bring out a teacher's enthusiasm then the work of instruction is about hopeless, Among the attendants is Fong Cam, who is a wellknown celestial merchant on Wall street.
Though a resident of this country only eighteen months, he is rapidly becoming Americanized. He dresses in the latest English fashion and as far as appearance goes is a polished gentlemen. The others dress in the same style, though their raiment is less costly. Their queues are carefully braided and knotted, and their shoes are nicely polished. This is not the result of outside suggestion.

He said: "In scientific circles much has been said about the survival of the fittest and the strongest. The strong and the best arise, the weak and in pastures green, why was he named McGinty. As a matter for historical reference it is here given. The mule is regularly employed at hauling an ore car in the Jay Gould tunnel and works about the strongest. The strong and the best arise, the weak and unfit are driven to the wall, and perish. In spiritual matters the time sooner or later on lost Thursday the mule walked slowly comes when the good and the bad are separated, and in Leaven nothing can ever enter that defleth or maketh a lie. It is the peotable the provided of the provided state of the peotable that shall be strong the provided state of the provided state o ple who know their God that shall be strong and do exploits.

Who are the strong and great? They that know their God; not as the heathen knows him, indistinctly, in distorted proportion, in uncertain gleamings, in faint outlines, in curious mixtures of traditions; such knowledge of God is like alpine flowers down betwixt granite boulders and smothered by snows and drifts; and yet, even such ore beautiful; even such a faint knowledge of God, when followed and allowed to develop, produces a Socrates and Autonimus Pius. Autonimus Pius To know God means more than to know him with that clear knowledge with which even Satan knows him. That people is strong and do exploits who know their God as Abraham, David, Daniel and Paul knew him, that is by revelation and obedience, Luther, Wesley, Edwards, Payson, Moody—such are the men that know God. And a records who know God. people who know God as pious men know him are strong and do exploits.

him are strong and do exploits.

Moses was such a man and witnessed to God by many exploits before he accomplished his mission. Young David, a mere lad, by his faith in God went forth and slew the giant when all Israel were fainthearted and cowardly. The Pilgrims, who in an unseaworthy vessel for conscience sake set forth for the American forests, went forth to lay unconsciously the foundawent forth to lay unconsciously the founda-tions of the grandest republic. Cromwell, the hero of England, as yet the unappre-ciated champion and noble spirit of whom all noble people may well be proud, did his grand exploits because of his grand faith in God. He led into battle God's hosts, and treated in God. trusted in God.

By contrast, witness the many lives which go to ruin. No man by his faith in God is go to ruin. No man by his faith in God is led to a drunkard's grave, a felon's cell, a murderer's dispair, a debauchee's pain, sickness and shame. No prodigal son was ever led into his swine-tending and rags and want by his faith in God. No, indeed. A religious life does not lead over to the wine cup of woe, nor the dregs of bitterness and sin. But many a man already far gone in ruin and woe has been by a true faith in God, snatched from his ruin and made a noble record. "The people that know their God shall be strong and do ex-

Second—Positively. What makes men strong and inspires them to noble exploits are: A deep, abiding faith in the living God, a sincere conviction that this God hath sent as on a mission personally compussioned attention from the best thought of the day. us on a mission, personally commissioned us, and that God, before whom we are yet

The humblest of human lives is transfigured when once filled with faith in God. How weak are thousands who might be strong if only they had the mighty inspiration of faith in God. A locomotive is weak and does naught until filled by the might of the invisible steam. Thousands of lives the invisible steam. Thousands of lives are ruined by sin that might have shined in unspeakable glory if only they had been converted and had faith in God. A standard of the control of the con ing party was at once organized. A station hand below heard the mule fall and signaled the engineer to hoist the cage. It was hoisted and haulted at the 250 foot level where the mule stepped off and went about his work having lost only one run on account of his perilous fall. He did not receive an injury and his great fall and wonderful escape has furnished the populace of the little mining camp a topic of conversation for the next month and McGinty's fame has received a revival.
